

COMMUNITY HEALTH WORKER PROGRAM ACCREDITATION

There's an expected 14% GROWTH in Community Health Workers by 2032.

URAC CHWP Accreditation recognizes organizations with strong community health workers programs that:

Meet the needs of their communities

Ensure representation of a diverse workforce

Train and develop community health workers

Engage with health industry partners

Evaluate and improve over time

Plan for sustainability

URAC formed a Community Health Worker Program Advisory Committee for valuable input on this Accreditation, including Federally Qualified Health Centers, community-based organizations, nonprofits, educational institutions and payers. They helped us create a robust, relevant accreditation program that reflects the needs, challenges and opportunities for growth that CHW programs see all across the country.

Some examples of our Committee partners:

Community health workers play a crucial role in addressing social determinants of health and delivering cost-effective care. This accreditation ensures programs that provide these vital services support the CHW workforce.

URAC accreditation allows Community Health Worker Programs to show their value partner and stakeholders.

URAC Accreditation can help grow your business.
