URAC TELEHEALTH ACCREDITATION HELPS YOUR ORGANIZATION INNOVATE AND THRIVE IN UNCERTAIN TIMES

Virtual visits and video calls became a mainstay during the pandemic when hospitals accelerated their adoption of telehealth. The benefits of telehealth include greater access to care, reduced disease exposure, convenience for patients and efficiency. And since consumers have now experienced telehealth, there's no going back. But, as hospitals and health systems face regulatory and payment unknowns with the end of the public health emergency, a URAC accreditation can put your organization in a position to showcase your forward-looking attention to the best outcomes and safety when using digital care solutions.

URAC's Telehealth Accreditation Program readies hospitals and health systems to meet the growing demands and standards and highlights a commitment to the highest level of quality in telehealth including:

Validation of privacy, security and safety technology requirements	Improvement of health outcomes	Enhanced credibility and contracting power	Risk management peace-of-mind	A roadmap for ongoing improvement

Our collaborative approach to accreditation improves outcomes, controls costs, enhances stakeholder satisfaction and readies you to take advantage of opportunities on the horizon.

A URAC gold star accreditation seal is a public symbol of high-quality patient care.
